

Clinical Research in Children?

Go online to learn more.
www.ChildrenAndClinicalStudies.nhlbi.nih.gov

View No More Hand-Me-Downs: Research Designed for Children.

This informative web site, including a 10-minute documentary, offers facts and insight into why children should be included in research and educates families about participating in studies.

Consider these facts:

- Children need medications, devices and treatments that take into account their unique medical conditions as well as their developing bodies and brains.
- What might be right for an adult is not necessarily the best choice for a child.
- Clinical research in children is necessary to continue to improve health outcomes.

Find helpful answers:

Join experts, parents and children themselves as they discuss their experiences with clinical research and answer a variety of important questions.

To learn more, visit this informative web site at www.ChildrenAndClinicalStudies.nhlbi.nih.gov
to view the 10-minute documentary and other educational features.

National Heart
Lung and Blood Institute
People Science Health

National Center for Research Resources

National Marfan Foundation

The Gerber Foundation
Enhancing the quality of life of infants and young children

